

Small Group Follow-up

Purpose: To equip believers to do follow-up in small groups.

Objectives: By the end of this lesson the student will:

1. Be able to explain the benefits for doing small group follow-up.
2. Be able to put together a small group follow-up lesson plan based upon the Hook, Book, Look, Took method of Bible study.
3. Have seen a small group follow-up lesson demonstrated utilizing follow-up #4.

Key Verse: Acts 2:42

I. Introduction

Picture yourself being at a Billy Graham outreach or crusade. The stadium or arena is jammed full of people. As Dr. Graham finishes his sermon, thousands of people respond to his invitation for people to receive Christ. You are in charge of following each of those individuals up, helping them to understand more fully the decisions they made to give their lives to the Lord. But wait, you ask. How can I get this job done? I don't have time to meet with everyone. There are only 24 hours in a day, and I do have to work, you say. How do you deal with this dilemma? If they aren't followed up soon, they may fall away.

This may not be exactly realistic, but you may find yourself needing to follow-up several different people at one time. It may only be 3 or 4, but the dilemma is still the same. Because everyone has such varied and busy schedules, how do I follow them up quickly enough to help ground them in their faith? We will look at two possibilities and make a strong case for you to consider one option over the other. We are not saying that either is wrong or that one is better than the other, but all too often we see follow-up of a new believer only as a one-on-one relationship. This may not be the most effective solution in light of the Great Commission.

II. The Pros and Cons of Small Group Follow-up

Following up a new believer is crucial to that believer's long-term involvement in the Christian life. When it comes to sharing with a new believer core issues related to his or her salvation, doing follow-up shouldn't be a question as to whether or not it needs to be done. The question that needs to be addressed is how should I go about getting it done. Basically, there are two options – do I do it on an individual basis or do I follow-up new believers in a group setting?

Think through for a moment some pros and cons to doing follow-up in a small group. After you have done that, take a look at the list that we have included. Even though this list is only a partial one, it should paint for you a picture why doing follow-up in a small group is definitely something to consider.

Pros

- ❑ You can follow-up more people
- ❑ Synergism between the group
- ❑ Spiritual multiplication begun
- ❑ You spend less time in preparation by only preparing the same lesson once
- ❑ Better accountability.

Cons

- ❑ Tends to be less personal
- ❑ Finding a time when all can meet can be difficult
- ❑ Group may not gel, which could stifle the growth process
- ❑ More in-depth preparation time required

As you can see, working with groups has definite advantages. In a group setting, you have more opportunity for growth, accountability and multiplication, both of people and your effort, i.e. your time. The advantages far outweigh the disadvantages. And, most of the disadvantages can easily be taken care of through better preparation. Being in a group will allow you to see quickly who is really interested in growing in the Lord. It serves as a better filter.

So, the question becomes how exactly do you do a small-group follow-up? Well, the easy part is that the material is the same, whether you are meeting one-on-one or in a group. The difference becomes how to prepare the material in such a way to maximize the effectiveness of the follow-up itself.

III. Sample Lesson Guide

Good questions are the key to success in leading a guided discussion. In order to know what kind of questions to ask you first need to determine what you want to accomplish. You must have specific objectives for every lesson.

1. The objectives of the lesson should focus on at least three areas.

- a. What do you want them to know and understand more clearly?
- b. How do you want the members of the group to value the lesson? To do this, you as the teacher must:
 - 1) Learn to use effective introductions.
 - 2) Share personal stories and illustrations.
 - 3) Ask thoughtful questions.

- c. What do you want them to do with what they've learned?

2. The objectives should be measurable and stated in specific terms.

3. The objectives should not simply be “knowledge” goals, since you are trying to influence the total person: their intellect, emotions, and will. We do not want to just impart information. We are looking for changed lives.

4. Turn to the Sample Lesson Planner on page 5 of the session on “Teaching Effectively in Ministry Situations.” This will give you a guide to walk through to organize your own Bible study.

IV. Application

We will demonstrate in class how to guide a discussion group using Follow-up number 4 (if you are not involved with a specific training class, please have your mentor put a lesson together and demonstrate for you). However, we would like you to attempt to use this method by designing a lesson plan for Follow-up #3 (“Your New Life in the Spirit”) to be used in a small group. And then, after seeing the demonstration on a different follow-up, this will allow you to fully understand why this method is effective. Also, if you haven’t already, you will hopefully be in a position to walk one or more persons through follow-up soon. This will help encourage you to be ready to begin discipling them and further you on the road to spiritual multiplication.

Discussion Questions:

1. What are some of the benefits for doing small group follow-up?
2. How would you put together a small group follow-up lesson plan based upon the Hook, Book, Look, Took method of Bible study?
3. What did you learn from the lesson that was demonstrated?
